Another question; would any of these work with my fulldrive or deville? If so how? If i run the fulldrive in front of the fulldrive 2 does it reamp how the deville would in the signal chain with my amp? Ive used Line6 POD HD 100 in the past but not sure if its old or obsolete? Thanks! Im also looking to invest in new guitar pedals.

That would be correct. I play just amps like a 100w Fender 100R amp which has a very sweet basic sound but can get dark and harsh with a box of distortion pedals. A 45w can get a nice clean tone from OD pedals but also get dark when pushing them. Kontakt tones are easy to achieve (aiming for the classic BOSS) but some of the more lite versions can get a bit dark and compressed with a Jeff Buckley distortion pedal. Also, it has to be said that some of Jeff Buckley's sounds are done with a combination of all the PB 808s he bought in LA. They all sound quite different so its crucial when converting a tone to get the right amplifier to get the same vibe as the original. Its also important to think about what of the tone comes from the amp and what comes from the pedal. If you decide to go for a big overdrive pedal, its important to also get your amp to have more presence and not going for that anemic sounding amp as in the past. BBEs, Dunlops, Orange and even the original Big Deal can make a huge difference in the tone department. I like the combo and there are tons of Kontakt patches available. But if you want to try it for yourself, i suggest you start with the GBS settings and see if that works for you. Its a bit too dark and too compressed (except at night). I would try the GBS+ and use the soundfonts. If it doesnt sound right, go in and invert the fader on the compressor and try a -3 dB compensation. It wont sound good but it will get closer to what you want. If you want more oomph, there is a built in saturator in the GBS+ and use that as a boost. And of course you dont need to go too crazy on the warm switches. Use as much as you need for the song. If you get the GBS, its worth it because is a very cool and well constructed pedal. Honestly, the worst thing about the GBS (besides the price) is the delay...it bites so much for the Gilmourish.com forum! 5ec8ef588b
