Investigation of Lumefantrine Toxicity by Molecular Simulation Studies. A theoretical study, including theoretical docking and molecular dynamics (MD) simulations has been carried out to investigate the toxicity of lumefantrine (LMF), a drug used to treat malaria. The toxicological properties were primarily studied based on the lethal activity of LMF to a human receptor protein, the proteasome. Our results showed that LMF had high toxicity to the receptor, which caused a high inhibition of proteasome activity. However, the catalytic activity was not so strongly impaired. In addition, the toxicity of LMF resulted in different conformations of the proteasome. The toxicity to the proteasome was greater than that to the EGFR (Epidermal Growth Factor Receptor) protein because of the higher binding affinity of LMF to the proteasome. Furthermore, the EGFR stability was reduced by exposure to LMF, as demonstrated by energy decomposition analysis. Our study also indicated that LMF most likely inhibits the proteasome by acting on a key residue that is located at the interface of the α subunit and the 19S subunit.Q: Scaling the accessibility of a page by increasing the size of the main font I would like to increase the font size of a responsive web page that only have a main font and when I increase the screen size, instead of making the text a bit smaller I want it to be bigger. My site is At the top of the page, on the menu bar, you have the big text and if you resize your browser or screen the text becomes bigger. I want the same text but on the left side of the page, in an 'A' tag, with no font whatsoever, I want it to be bigger as the screen gets bigger. You can see what I
