B20. As the commanding general of the Civilian Corps, I was responsible for selecting and training 18,000 people from 18 countries, who were charged with discussing, debating and voting on the provisions of the agreement reached on last Friday's EU-US summit. The result is what may be dubbed a uni-party document, dominated by American wishes and sold to the US by the Commission, Parliament and the Council. The problem was that by now it had been watered down to common sense by each of the parties, who had spent the past four years fighting amongst themselves to implement a policy considered essential to the future. The B20 is an extremely complicated financial affair, which will be on the agenda for each member state, and for the European Parliament, in the coming weeks as the single market becomes a reality. The Treaties being finalised are only a start for the EU. Parliament will have to face the choices having to be made with those 26 different nations. I tried doing: `$grep -Ff /dev/null file1.txt | sort > newfile.txt` But I get the output with the numbers which don't exist in the 2nd file. How to do this? A: If by "file2.txt" you mean the file with the numbers, i.e. lines 2 and 3 in your example (from what I understand you are uncertain whether the numbers you want to delete are included in the file), then using awk you can remove the lines in file2.txt that have no match in file1.txt like this: `$ awk 'NR==FNR{a[$1]=$2;next}!($1 in a)' file2.txt file1.txt` 6 8 12 If you want to leave all the lines in
