Apoptosis by methamphetamine in PC12 cells: involvement of the mitochondrial pathway. Methamphetamine (METH), a psychostimulant, has been demonstrated to cause cell death by apoptosis in vitro. This study examined the mechanism by which METH-induced apoptosis in PC12 cells. When exposed to 24 h of METH treatment (1-40 microg/ml), there was a concentration-dependent increase of cell death by apoptosis. This process was caspase-dependent and was associated with the involvement of the mitochondrial pathway. In addition, the METH-induced apoptosis was accompanied by a significantly increased generation of reactive oxygen species

(ROS) and the loss of MMP, with accompanied depolarization of the mitochondrial transmembrane potential. While the early apoptosis was shown to involve the caspase-3 activity, the late phase of apoptosis was accompanied by the activation of caspase-8. The administration of the caspase inhibitors could protect PC12 cells from METH-induced apoptosis. Taken together, the results suggest that METH may induce the apoptosis in PC12 cells through oxidative stress mediated caspase activation, which may lead to mitochondrial apoptotic pathway.

Q: What should we do about questions about API's? I'm having a hard time understanding how it's really supposed to work. It's clear what should and shouldn't be allowed. But if an API isn't a software package (like source code or a web interface), then what is to be done with its help questions? Some questions seem to be about the technical use of the API, but if API's exist because they're not a software product, then shouldn't we be trying to encourage the people asking about them to actually create the software product? What is the proper stance on questions like that? Example: I'm developing a website with an API, how should I implement that? Is this a good candidate for Super User? If not, what should be changed to make it a good candidate? As
